Symposium Director: James Nagel, University of Georgia

Acknowledgments:

The conference director wishes to express his appreciation to a number of people who provided help with planning the program, especially my colleagues in the Society for the Study of the American Short Story. Olivia Carr Edenfield, Executive Coordinator of American Literature Association, handled all hotel logistics and arrangements and served as Site Director. Oliver Scheiding, Johannes Gutenberg-Universität, served as International Coordinator, advertising the symposium in Europe and encouraging colleagues in American Studies to attend. Dustin Anderson helped in many ways, especially in taking responsibility for the society website and handling technical details. Many other people contributed time and effort in organizing panels and other aspects of the program, among them Robert Clark, Gloria Cronin, Molly Donehoo, Executive Assistant of the ALA, and a score of scholars across the country who organized panels for this meeting. I also thank Dartmouth College for my continuing appointment as a Resident Scholar and the use of Baker Library, a most congenial environment. My role as Eidson Distinguished Professor Emeritus at the University of Georgia allows me to continue the most important institutional connection of my life. I offer special thanks to Alfred Bendixen, the founder and Executive Director of the American Literature Association, without whose generous assistance this symposium would not have been possible.

A Call for Papers

The Society for the Study of the American Short Story

Invites proposals for presentation on two Society panels at the annual ALA conference:

- 1. Recovering “Lost” short stories. An investigation of significant stories that have been neglected or totally unknown in literary history.
- 2. New Readings of “Classic” American Stories. Papers should offer new information or a new perspectives that changes the way a story can be read and taught in American literature courses.

Proposals should give a one-paragraph abstract of the paper to be presented along with a biographical paragraph giving the credentials of the presenter to address this topic.

Please send proposals to the Society president, Jim Nagel, at jnagel@uga.edu by December 20, 2016.

For presentation at the American Literature Association^[1]_{SEP} 28th Annual Conference,
